Course Description:

In this course we will read—and re-read—three novels by Jane Austen. Our first reading will track the development of Austen’s unique approach to the realist novel. Our re-reading will investigate how that unique approach participated in contemporaneous debates about art, personhood, and politics. Austen was an active participant in these debates—a sharp, subtle, and principled writer who tended to explore competing arguments and assumptions rather than render explicit judgments. She weighed in on aesthetic controversies involving beauty and the picturesque, the appropriate language for literature, the ethics of readers’ identification with characters, and the truth claims inherent in realism. She considered philosophical questions about how individuals come to know the world and themselves, and the value and danger of a complex inner life of emotion and imagination. She examined the competing claims her contemporaries made for the primacy of the individual, the family, and the community, and for local rootedness and cosmopolitan independence.

This course fulfills the English Department’s Literary History II requirement.

Structure:

Before the January session begins, we will read Pride and Prejudice, Emma, and Persuasion on our own. Our reading will be guided by six assignments, two for each novel. During the January session, we will re-read these three novels and encounter for the first time other works of painting, literature, and nonfiction prose.

Course Requirements:

- six pre-session reading and reflection exercises (5% each)
- three in-session reading and reflection exercises (5% each)
- three 4-5 p. essays (15% each)
- class participation (10%)

Policies:

- Please arrive two minutes early to each zoom meeting so we can check your sound and do any necessary trouble-shooting. Repeated tardiness will lower your grade.
- Students may miss one session for any reason without penalty. A second session may be missed without penalty if additional work is done to compensate for the absence. Additional absences will lower your grade. If you miss four or more sessions, I will ask you to withdraw from the course.
• Late papers will be penalized two points per day beginning the day they are due. No work will be accepted after the last day of finals.
